WHAT I WILL STUDY

The Master's Degree in Global Affairs and International Relations, taught entirely in English, focuses on the major challenges and transformations of the contemporary international system. It addresses global dynamics, shifting power relations, technological innovation, and their implications for institutions and security. The program offers a multidisciplinary approach, covering topics such as geopolitics, international trade, visual politics, AI in politics, diplomacy, and sustainable development. Particular attention is given to evolving political and economic systems, international crises, and emerging conflicts. Through theoretical courses and practical experiences, students acquire analytical skills to understand and navigate complex global scenarios in constant evolution.
